You can count the summer as full gone.

It is Sage advice to save your money; you can't be guaranteed seven millions.

There sympathies with West Rutland, which uses a passenger car for a railroad station.

The death of the man who made the first raid under prohibition in Vermont has just occurred. When did we have a prohibitory law?

Powered by poverty to surrender, the former mayor of Palermo, N. Y., makes a pathetic figure as he comes back to face the charge of embezzlement. For a year he has been an outcast.

Vermont voters, who are sticklers for simon-pure, native-born candidates should be out in Oklahoma, where they could find in their desire. It is a Cherokee Indian who is first in the race as a candidate for Congress, and he certainly is a "native."

The story that Clement rode to Bennington in a parlor car while Page rode in the smoke on the same train is exploded by the Rutland Herald, which says that the two did not go on the same train at all. It would make little difference with the merits of the campaign if Page rode on the one-carrier, either.

This frank admission from the President of the Rutland Herald may sound like rank heresy. Rutland people appreciate good roads for the reason that there are none in town.
Some people will probably call this a blunt statement, but it's a fact just the same. Not within the limits of the town is there a single highway to which we can point as an example of good road construction. Some of our roads are better than others, for which we are very thankful; but none of them is so good as it ought to be considering the money that is spent every year.
This is not because our road commissioner is not faithful, but because he doesn't know how to build good roads, although he probably has as much knowledge on the subject as any other resident of the town. It may be downright disloyalty or a painful adherence to truth, very likely the latter, that forced the Herald to speak out. Painful as it is, the admission is the best kind of a remedy. If other towns would lay bare their numerous secrets in this open manner they would be better off eventually, for local pride, pricked to the quick, would rise in its might and change the conditions which forced the admission. The Herald may be fussy temporarily, but he will be greatly consequently.

VERMONT GRANITE ADVERTISED WITHOUT COST.

If imitation is the true form of flattery, as it is said to be, then the best advertising is an "attempt to imitate." For that reason we see articles advertised to be "as good as" such and such a standard and well known brand. Particularly does this habit of comparison find favor with the provision business, in which the manufacturer of some new thing pronounces it to be as good as that which is already on the market. Unconsciously, perhaps, the writer of the new product on the occasion publicizes the older and the standard brand a distinct service in advertising his product to be as good as, etc. For in stressing that his product is as good as that which is already on the market, he places the stamp of reliability on the older article; he tells the public that the older product is all right and that it has been the aim to produce an article of the same high standard. The purchasing public will read between the lines, and if he is at all critical will decide that the never tried article is good enough for its use if the newer product is not considered better even by the extravagant advertisement writer. Therefore the article which has become the basis for imitation will gain renewed prestige through the attempt to measure some other product up to its standard.

In a similar way will Vermont granite receive the benefit of the unadvised advertising, such as is contained in a story despatch from the Lone Star state, which compares an El Paso county strata of granite with Vermont stone. The El Paso granite is said to be extremely good for building purposes. The writer even goes to the extreme to say that the Texas product is "superior." All advertising matter of this sort needs Vermont granite just nothing and is well named by them the more the better.
It may serve to knock some out of the way miners where the local work has not established a reputation.
